FOREWORD

Shri T. K. Baruah has brought out a compilation of "Nocte Love Songs". He is the first researcher who has taken the pains to collect and translate to writing the folk lore of Nocte tribe. Having no script of its own, the Nocte tribe has no literature and this has made the task of Shri Baruah a very difficult one. As the word by word translation or reproduction of Nocte Love Songs into English or other language is not possible in writing, this book contains the gist or paraphrasing of the renderings.

The Love Songs of Noctes contain deep imprint of Nocte culture and every number, verse or rhyme has special significance which is not usually understood by a lay man. It is this field of Nocte culture which nobody has so far attempted to study. This study involves lot of thinking and insight into tribal traditions and culture. Shri Baruah's endeavour in this direction is simply praise worthy and deserves all encouragement. I should say that Shri Baruah has made an excellent beginning and I have every reason to believe that he will continue to maintain the tempo in this direction and publish more works of this type in the near future.

PREFACE

A year ago, I compiled some hundred love songs of the Wanchos, a neighbouring tribe of the Noctes. While doing my field studies on the Wancho love songs, I got chances to present and discuss many a matters on folk-culture with a few educated Nocte youths who happened to be known to me intimately. They, with their elegant views, insisted upon me to take up the Nocte love songs for study and enabled me to collect about three hundred of their love songs. They in fact, sometimes sang for me, gave the meanings of the songs they sang, which I had used with profit. The present compilation, is in fact, the outcome of the generous urge put on me by this group of young boys.

The Noctes, a major tribe of Tirap district, with a population of about 24,500 inhabit in the central and lower belt of the mountainous regions of the district adjoining Dibrugarh district of Assam in the north. The Nocte language consists of nine dialectical groups—Hawa, Photung, Khapa, Hakhun, Domlok, Jope, Dadam, Laju and Sangnyak which phonetically differ from each other to a considerable extent. The people speaking the Khapa group of the Nocte language (i. e. people of Naksa, Tupi and Polung villages) are known as traditional singers, and the songs prevalent among them are sung by all the Noctes belonging to the other dialectical groups. So it happens, that the people of other than the Khapa group cannot give the exact meaning of the songs they sing.

Nocte love songs are traditional which have passed from generation to generation. Since the Noctes are trained in songs from childhood and practice singing constantly, there is nothing astonishing in their ability to burst into singing without notice.

Their Love songs are impressive. These songs express the lover's attachment and attraction to one of the opposit sex, the sweet-heart.

Usually, both the boy and the girl sing, one answering the other, on the question of love making.

The warmth and tenderness which young lovers feel for each other, find expression in the Nocte love songs. Serious obstacles may arise to marriage of the lovers because the boy may belong to the wrong group, or the girl's parents may not consent to the union. So the lovers see themselves in the midst of risks and anxieties. Such feelings are embodied with open passion in some of the songs with a taint of melancholy sweetness. The frank approach to the ups and downs of love, and the determined attitude of the partners to overcome the hurdles, are the subject matter of many a Nocte love songs.

The songs recorded in this book were collected mostly from Tupi and Naksa villages and their meanings were obtained from a few enlightened locals of these villages. I confess—I have never been a professed student of Linguistics and connected subjects of human interest and my knowledge of the Nocte language is of the rudimentary type. What I have put here, is my amateurish observations for whatever they are worth, in a spirit of utmost sincerity. I crave the indulgence of the scholars and the Nocte people in general for the faults of omission and commission and errors in giving the meaning of the songs. I caution the readers that the meanings of the songs as being put in the book, are just the broad based sense the songs convey and not the word by word interpretation.

I am very much indebted to Shri T. L. Rajkumar, the Honourable Speaker of the Arunachal Pradesh Assembly, for sparing his valuable time for a critical reading of the manuscript and contributing a learned foreword to this book. I cannot forget the youth section of Naksa and Tupi villages who helped me in collection of the various songs recorded in this book and giving their meanings.

I take the opportunity to put at contact with civilization has disorganised and disintegrated the traditional life everywhere and the people living in the hills, have been detribalised to an appreciable extent in recent times. Today, in every walk of life, the value attitude systems of the Noctes are tuned to the changing conditions. Even the hard core culture religion is indicating sings of acculturation as manifest in the dying out of social institution like Morung etc.

I wish in this stride to be developed and advanced, may the Nocte donot lose his moorings with his traditional past, denounce his rich treasure of cultural heritage and particularly his dance and songs, and see if these could bring to him a recovery of his nerve which he is going to lose.
